Part I Writing

The Smartphone Addiction

The popularity of smartphones makes the smartphone addiction increasingly commonplace. While we enjoy the convenience brought by smartphones, the overuse of smartphones exerts multiple adverse impacts on our life.

First of all, an excessive use of smartphones diminishes our ability to concentrate. Before getting up or going to sleep, we spend a long time surfing the Internet. When we are at work, in meetings and even when we are making breakfast, we check our phones for calls or messages. What's more, the smartphone addiction poses a danger to our interpersonal communication. We've all seen some couples sitting together in a restaurant, ignoring each other and engaging in their smartphones.

To get rid of the smartphone addiction, I suggest we should be disciplined and limit our use of smartphones step by step. The following tips may be helpful: Set rules for when we can use our smartphones; turn off our phones at certain times of the day; don't bring our phones or tablets to bedroom.

Part IV Translation

Continuing education is an educational activity after schooling for all members of society, especially adults. With the idea of lifelong education being accepted by more and more people, continuing education has drawn more and more attention from people. In China, continuing education includes many forms such as self-study exams, correspondence education, night university and TV university. Apart from the traditional classroom teaching, it also adopts the teaching method of distance learning. In recent years, China's continuing education has developed rapidly, but some problems have also emerged, such as the shortage of teachers and the outdated curriculum and teaching methods. Only by solving these problems fundamentally can we ensure that China's continuing education continues to develop so as to meet the needs of the community.
